KEYNOTE ADDRESS PRINTED IN JOURNAL

Without objection, the following text of Lilly Ledbetter’s “Women of the Year” address was printed in the Journal:

Nearly half a century after Congress enacted the Equal Pay Act, too many women in this country still do not get paid what men do for the exact same work. On average, a woman makes only 77 cents for every dollar that a man makes. The circumstances are even worse for Latinas and women of color. This is wrong and unjust. But, even more, it threatens the economic security of our families.

The fact is, millions of Americans are dependent on a woman’s paycheck just to get by, put food on the table, pay for child care, and deal with rising health care bills. Two-thirds of mothers bring home at least a quarter of their family’s earnings. In many families, the woman is the sole breadwinner.

On average, women lose an estimated $700,000 over their lifetimes due to unequal pay practices, and this inequality means real hardships for their families. Paycheck equity isn’t just morally right, nor is it just for women, it’s for families.

It’s also right for communities and the nation. Think about it: when women get equal pay for equal work, and finally receive their rightful salaries, those dollars can more freely flow back into the larger economy in the form of consumer spending. Justice for America’s working women is a perfect economic stimulus package. Families today are more dependent on a woman’s earnings for economic survival than ever before in our history.

I did not start out to be a spokesperson for equal rights. In fact, the plan I had sketched out for my life was a simple one. I would work hard, raise a family, and play by the rules. I would save and build a nest egg and when retirement came, I’d be able to simply settle down and enjoy the fruits of my labors. That’s the way it’s supposed to work, isn’t it? I wasn’t seeking fame or looking to become a household name. I just wanted fairness and the chance to make a good life for myself and my family. That’s not a lot to ask. Or so I thought. It should be pretty simple: You hold up your end of the bargain, your employers hold up theirs, and everybody wins. Right?

My name is Lilly Ledbetter, and I held up my end of the bargain. My employer, on the other hand, did not—and today I’m here to tell you a little bit about my story.

The story begins in 1979, when Goodyear hired me to work as a supervisor in their tire production plant in Gadsden, Alabama. I ended up working there for 19 years, 10 months. I was one of the few women to work there in a supervisory capacity—there were very few women in the factory in any capacity, much less in managerial jobs. It wasn’t easy. The plant manager flat out said that women shouldn’t be working in a tire factory because women just made trouble! Some years I got raises; some years I didn't. Some of the raises seemed pretty good, but I didn't know if they were as good as the raises other people were getting. But I did a good job, and I even got a "Top Performance Award" in 1996. I only started to get some hard evidence of what the men were making when someone anonymously left a piece of paper in my mailbox at work, showing what I got paid and what three other male managers were getting paid. As a result, I filed a complaint of discrimination with the 1998 EEOC and sued Goodyear in 1999. At the end of my career, when I was earning $3,727 per month, the lowest paid male was getting $4,286 per month for the same work, and he had a lot less experience than I did.

In court, Goodyear acknowledged that it was paying me a lot less than the men doing the same work. But they said that it was because I was a poor performer. That wasn't true, and thanks to some courageous women colleagues who spoke on my behalf, the jury didn't believe it. At the end of the trial, the jury found that Goodyear had discriminated against me in violation of Title VII. The jury awarded me back pay and more than $3.2 million in punitive damages.

That was a high point of my story. But that's also when things started to go downhill. Although in agreement that the jury's verdict was amply supported by the evidence at trial, the trial judge was forced to reduce the punitive damages award to $300,000 because of damage caps in Title VII—a mere 10 percent of what the jury had awarded me and hardly more than a slap on the wrist to a company the size of Goodyear. Goodyear, of course, appealed the entire verdict, and my case eventually reached the Supreme Court.

On May 29, 2007, I hit a low point. That's when the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and took every dollar away—even the back pay. Justice Alito wrote the opinion. According to him, I should have complained every time I got a smaller raise than the men, even if I didn't know what the men were getting paid and even if I had no way to prove that the decision was discrimination. The Court ruled that once 180 days had passed from the initial pay decision, the worker is stuck with unequal pay for equal work for the rest of her career and there is nothing illegal about it. Basically, the Supreme Court had said that if you don't figure things out right away, the company can treat you like a second-class citizen for the rest of your career. This decision completely reversed precedent, meaning that it wasn't just me who had to swallow the consequences of pay discrimination—every other working woman in America was being forced into the same corner.

Justice Ginsburg wrote an amazing dissent that hit the nail on the head. She said that the majority's rule just doesn't make sense in the real world. You can't expect people to go around asking their co-workers how much money they're making. Especially when you work at a place like I did, where you are one of the only women in a male-dominated factory, you don't want to make waves unnecessarily. You want to try to fit in and get along. But the bottom line was that every paycheck I received, I got less than what I was entitled to under the law. That was wrong, not to mention illegal, but the Supreme Court disagreed.

I won't lie to you; I was pretty devastated by the Court's decision. In one fell swoop, I lost my case and became the poster child for unequal pay for equal work. But instead of taking it quietly, I decided to fight back. I refused to take this unjust ruling lying down. I owed that much not just to myself, but to my daughter and granddaughter, not to mention all of America's women and girls who deserved a fighting chance.

The new law is important but only brings us to where we'd been the day before the Supreme Court issued its ruling. Women continue to face a persistent wage gap that is not closing nearly fast enough. There are still loopholes in existing laws large enough for employers to drive a truck through. So, while I am thrilled with how far we've come, I am equally certain our work is not yet done, a point I made at the White House that day with Mrs. Obama.

Ladies and gentlemen, our story is not finished. But the next chapter already has a name. It's called the Paycheck Fairness Act.

So when all was said and done in the courts, there were a few harsh realities. I worked hard at Goodyear, and I was good at my job. But for years and years, with every paycheck I received, I got less than what I earned, less than what I deserved, and less than I was entitled to under the law. But because Goodyear succeeded in keeping it a secret, five Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States said it didn't matter.

Let me tell you, it matters to me. And I should tell you that, to this very day, the discrimination persists. My pension and Social Security are based on the amount I earned while working there. So the company gets to keep my extra pension money as a reward for breaking the law and veering it up long enough to satisfy a narrow majority on the Supreme Court. And as for the wage gap, its days are numbered.

Earlier in my speech, I told you that a part of me wished I wasn't here. When I set out on my career in 1979, it wasn't part of my grand plan to some day have my name be on a Supreme Court Case or an act of Congress. I simply wanted to work hard and support my family. The rest, I believed, would take care of itself. Clearly, fate had other plans for this Alabama girl. After all, I started out as a supervisor at a tire plant. Thirty years later, I've been a litigant, an advocate, a lobbyist, an author, and a public speaker.

Sometimes, life throws us curveballs. We may not have asked for them, we may have not even expected them, but we still have to deal with them.

After everything that's happened to me, I've come to realize that the true test of a person is not so much what happens to us, but how we react to it. When we see an injustice, do we sit and do nothing, or do we fight back? When we experience failure, do we passively accept it, or do we learn from it and do better the next time? When we get knocked down, do we stay down, or do we get back up?

Each of us, every day, breaks through barriers for women and girls simply because we choose to believe the future can be better.

Thank you for having me here today. When it's all said and done, there's no place else I'd rather be.
