PRAYER

Upon invitation of Speaker Rendon, the following prayer was offered by Guest Chaplain Bob Oshita, Rinban, of the Buddhist Church of Sacramento, the second oldest Jodo Shinshu Buddhist Temple in the mainland United States:

Thank you Speaker Rendon and the honored members of the California State Assembly for this invitation; it is a very special honor to join with you again. Most especially, it is an honor to help welcome to our State Capitol, His Holiness, the Dalai Lama.

If there is an advocate for world peace and harmony; if there is one whose presence alone embodies kindness, forgiveness, and gratitude, that Ambassador of Goodness has long been, His Holiness, the Dalai Lama. His Holiness has been an unhindered beacon of hope for all humanity to live with compassion.

Please join me in a moment of meditative reflection.

When horrific acts of violence occur, my heart has wondered, "Is there really hope for humanity?" The Dalai Lama is my living reminder that creating a better world begins with me; healing the wounds of hate begins with me; hope for humanity begins with my patience and kindness.

Today, let us all renew our belief in the essential goodness of our shared humanity. Let us today renew our hope for a better world. Let us look within and know that the end of hate, the end of rage, and the beginning of peace, begins with each of us. It begins with my patience and kindness; with my peace of mind.

Creating for a better future begins with us.

REMARKS BY THE SPEAKER OF THE ASSEMBLY

The Honorable Anthony Rendon, Speaker of the Assembly, addressed the assemblage, and made the following remarks:

Colleagues and distinguished guests, it is my honor to welcome His Holiness The 14th Dalai Lama to the California State Capitol.

As someone who fell in love with the study of philosophy, I am particularly excited to hear from His Holiness, one of the world's great thought leaders, on some of the great questions of our day—How do we increase compassion? How do we advance ethics? How do we achieve peace? How do we work as one world to save the only world we know?

In following the journey of the Dalai Lama across America these past few days, I have greatly appreciated many of His Holiness's comments. One was the statement "Education can help us change our way of thinking." I don't think there is anyone in this room who does not see education as government's top priority, so let us work together to advance education so it can change more ways of thinking.

His Holiness has said, "A further source of hope is the genuine cooperation among the world's nations toward a common goal evident in the Paris accord on climate change." Both houses of this Legislature have shown national and global leadership on this issue, so let us work together to further spark the cooperation the world needs on climate change.

Finally, as we were still reeling from the latest horrific violence that we saw in Orlando, His Holiness spoke with the power of a silent prayer and offered consolation through a message of compassion and hope for the future.

Colleagues and guests, I know you are as excited as I am to hear from His Holiness The Dalai Lama. And now, to bring us to that point, it is my pleasure to introduce the President pro Tempore of the California State Senate, Kevin de León.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE

I am deeply honored to introduce and welcome to the California Legislature His Holiness, the Dalai Lama. His Holiness is the embodiment of our highest aspirations—compassion, empathy, and love. His Holiness inspires us to recognize and advocate for those who are fighting for dignity.

Born into a farming family in a small Tibetan hamlet, this man of peace who describes himself as a “simple Buddhist monk” won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1989. His Holiness has taken a leadership role in raising the awareness of global warming and its destructive consequences. His Holiness has traveled the world, spreading his message of peace, non-violence, compassion, and inter-religious harmony and understanding. His Holiness was just in Washington, DC, and now we are honored and blessed that His Holiness is here with us today in California’s Capitol, where, to be honest, I think we might be more receptive to his message of harmony.

We have Senator Janet Nguyen to thank for this privilege, as it was her invitation that brought His Holiness to us for this Joint Session of Enlightenment. And the timing could not be better. These are unsettled, even scary times. Political vitriol at the national and international levels threatens to divide our country and world even further. Our sense of safety has been undermined by senseless acts of violence fueled by hatred. We have monumental challenges before us. It is at these times when spiritual guidance not only gives us comfort but also direction; guidance to help us become vessels of peace; teachings to help us empathize with the most vulnerable and needy among us; a spiritual light to guide us as individuals and policy makers toward a greater common good.

We must lead in accordance to a fundamental truth taught to us by His Holiness: “Love and compassion are necessities, not luxuries. Without them, humanity cannot survive.” This is the message he brings to us. With that, His Holiness The 14th Dalai Lama.

PRESENTATION OF HIS HOLINESS THE 14th DALAI LAMA

Senate President pro Tempore De León presented His Holiness The 14th Dalai Lama, whereupon His Holiness addressed the assemblage.

Grounds for Hope for a Better World

I am honored to be able to address the Joint Session of the California State Legislature. Yours is not only one of the largest states of the union, but is also admired across the world as a major focus of innovation. It is therefore a source of deep satisfaction to have this opportunity to share some of my thoughts with you, the distinguished state legislators.

Almost six decades have passed since I left my homeland Tibet and became a refugee. Thanks to the kindness of the government and people of India, we Tibetans found a second home where we could live in dignity and freedom, able to keep our language, culture, and Buddhist traditions alive.

For much of my life our world has been riven by violent conflict. Soon after I was born in 1935, the Sino-Japanese conflict broke out, while the various circumstances that would give rise to the Second World War were already gathering force. Nuclear weapons were put to horrifying use in Hiroshima and in Nagasaki. The hard-fought civil war in China was followed by the Korean War and the Vietnam War. Meanwhile, many countries in Asia, the Middle East, Latin America, and Africa were thrown into turmoil during struggles for liberation or civil war. Some historians estimate that more than 200 million people were killed in violent conflicts in the 20th century.

Today, there is no end in sight to the horrific conflicts in the Middle East, which, in the case of Syria, has led to the greatest refugee crisis in a generation. Appalling terrorist attacks such as those in Paris and Brussels have created deep-seated fear and suffering. It would be easy to feel a sense of hopelessness. But rather than giving in to despair, it is all the more necessary in the early years of the 21st century to be realistic, confident, and optimistic. A solution to many of the problems we face is to remind ourselves that as human beings we are all brothers and sisters belonging to one human family, and that together we can take action to address these global challenges.

Recognition of universal human rights, including the right to self-determination, has grown beyond anything imagined a century ago. They have become part of our collective conscience despite secondary ethnic, religious, cultural, social, and national differences between us. There is a growing international consensus in support of gender equality and respect for women, one-half of humanity. And there is now—particularly among the younger generation—a widespread rejection of war as a means of solving problems. Significant reductions in the world's arsenal of nuclear weapons mean that a Nobel Peace Prize Laureate resolution calling for a timetable to be set for further reductions and ultimately the elimination of nuclear weapons—a sentiment President Obama has recently reiterated in Hiroshima—no longer seems a mere dream.

In today's world, the notion of absolute victory for one side and defeat of another is thoroughly outdated. Violence inevitably incurs further violence, whereas Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King, Jr. proved that non-violence can be powerfully effective. I admire those who, taking a long-term perspective, are seeking to achieve an era of dialogue in the 21st century. This includes those working to address terrorism at its root. Employing dialogue and mutual respect, they recognize the depths of misunderstanding, the nature of rage, and the divisive idea of "us" and "them" that can become so dangerous. Similarly, we have seen many ordinary people across the world displaying great compassion toward the plight of refugees, from those who have rescued them from the sea, to those who have taken them in and provided friendship and support. Compassion moves them as a natural human response.

The circumstances that turn people into refugees are complicated. But when we see the expressions on their faces, particularly those of the women and children, and recognize the desperate sadness of their situation, there is nothing else to do but help them in any way we can. I also understand how some in the host countries may feel apprehensive of being overwhelmed. Ultimately and most important in the long term is restoring peace to the lands these refugees are fleeing so they can return home, if possible, and in due course. Help in the meantime must include ensuring children are educated and youths acquire skills to be able to contribute to a brighter future when that time comes. Tibetans have first-hand experience of living in exile and, although we have not yet been able to return to our homeland, we are grateful for the humanitarian support we have received down the decades from friends, including the people of the United States.

The recent Paris accord on climate change is also encouraging in powerfully demonstrating how, if there is the will, there can be genuine cooperation among the world's nations toward responsible collective action.

My own home, Tibet, is the world's highest and largest plateau and is a global climate change epicenter, warming nearly three times as fast as the rest of the globe. It is known as the earth's Third Pole because of its strategic importance as the largest repository of fresh water and glaciers outside the Arctic and Antarctic. It is the source of the earth's most extensive river system. These rivers and Tibet's enormous glaciers are critical to the world's ten most densely populated nations.

I view this as a vivid reflection of our global interdependence, infused by the urgency for collaboration and understanding among all those concerned about our common future. When climate change threatens the health of this planet that is our only home, it is only by considering the larger global interest that local and national interests will be met.

In order to find solutions to the violent conflicts and environmental dangers that confront us, it is necessary to look for new answers. Even though I am a Buddhist monk, I believe that today these solutions lie beyond religion; in the promotion of a concept I call secular ethics. This is an approach to educating ourselves based on scientific findings, common experience, and common sense—a more universal approach to the promotion of our shared human values.

Some may feel that the word secular implies a dismissal of religion. However, according to the way it is understood in India, the word secular implies an inclusive respect for all religions without any bias, and even a respect for the views of those who have no religious beliefs. This reflects a key mission of my life, which is the promotion of understanding and harmony among our spiritual traditions. It is one of three commitments that include, as a human being, the promotion of human values, and, as someone in whom the Tibetan people place their trust, the safeguarding of the culture and identity of the people of Tibet along with the natural environment of our homeland.

Over more than three decades, my discussions with scientists, educationalists, and social workers from across the globe reveal common concerns and agreement on the need for a system of ethics that can appeal to all seven billion human beings.

As a result, we have explored new ways of education: a system that incorporates an education of the heart, but one that is based on study of the workings of the mind and emotions through scholarship and scientific research rather than religious practice. Since we need moral principles—compassion, respect for others, kindness, taking responsibility—in every field of human activity, schools should create opportunities for children to develop greater self-awareness, to learn how to manage their destructive emotions, and cultivate healthy social skills.

There are a growing number of schools in North America and Europe where the teaching of Social and Emotional Learning (SEL) is being incorporated into the curriculum. In the Canadian province of British Columbia, SEL is taught in all schools, from kindergarten to high school. A new initiative I am involved with, based at Emory University, entails developing a curriculum for teaching secular ethics in schools. The first draft of this curriculum is being introduced in several schools in India and the United States on a pilot basis. It will be important to see how these trials work out. If the results are promising, we can extend what we have learned to other schools internationally. An approach to education that engenders moral values in students from kindergarten right through to university will imbue people with a different outlook, and importantly, a sense of what it is to be a global citizen.

Various scientific findings confirm that human nature is basically compassionate—in one experiment infants respond happily to portrayals of people helping each other, but with dismay to images of hindering and harm. There is real hope. We can change ourselves, our way of thinking, and our engagement with the world through appropriate education. Those who, like me, are part of the 20th century generation may not see the result of such education. However, I remain optimistic, and since I have gained some experience over the last 80 years, I feel I must share my thoughts with others in order that we may together cultivate a new vision for the future and make an effort to fulfill it.

My generation has witnessed and experienced so much violence. If the same conditions prevail, the younger generation and others in the future too will suffer, and the 21st century will repeat the pain and bloodshed of the past. Those who are young today have both an opportunity and a responsibility to work to create a better and happier world. We are still in the early years of this century, and I believe it is possible that decades from now will see an era of peace. It is our collective responsibility to make it happen.

The time has come to take concrete steps to bring about a real transformation in the ways we educate our future generations. We need to combine both an education of the mind with an education of the heart so that our children grow up as responsible, caring citizens equipped to meet the challenges of today's increasingly globalized world.
